Very respectfully, REV. H. GERRIER.

It has been notless by a shrewd writer of American manners that a mechanic in search of work is "out of a job," a sleek in the same predicament is "disengaged," and a professional man is "at leisure." The mechanic "gets work," the clerk "copports" himself with some establishment, and the professional man "nesumes practice." This rate holds good in And the question now is whether she died some other things heades employment. When of hysteria or spine, with a preponderance of one of the "apper ten" has a high time over night, it is said the next day that he was "slightly slevated."
